Joyous Wool Jersey

Paris Shows Fabrics For Dress-up Styles

PARIS. wool jerseys with body and some worsted suitings.

EMPHASIS was on dress-up materials when Paris couture showed their mid-season collections. Satins and velvets led both types in qualities which seemed less stiff and heavy than the yarn-dyed satins and taffeta-backed velvets headlined in recent seasons. There was even one model in the supple rayon velvet of the type called "transparent" when it was fashionable pre-war—this in a Fifth model. A very supple satin appeared at Lanvin and Paquin, and Robert Piguet revived crepe satin.

Shiny Satins
Most of the satins were highly shiny. One or two models in Balmain's "Yves" appeared in a number of showings. It was used generally for simple models as cocktail suits at Paquin in silver or golden yellow in which shades it looks like a metallic weave so fluid and lustrous in aspect are the thick surface yarns of this novelty rayon satin.

Cotton Nets and Laces
The mid-season's hint at a good future for cotton nets and laces. Among these used by Fauch for his manly tailored ensembles were white cotton laces of Chalais type, in dress width and with motifs fairly large and closely spaced. Such laces made a couple of models while laces types in silk or rayon made others.

The cotton nets registered at Schiaparelli, who used them in differently coloured layers for both hats and dresses, at Madeleine Vramant, who even showed a wedding gown of cotton net at Manquin and made one or two models in several houses.

Here's a salute to this year's fashion fabric that appears with equal aplomb on the so-called "thrift" floor and in the plushy salon. Freed modestly in this handsome number of sheer wool jersey. Bands of dark gray are set on light gray, and tiny buttons lead from the tiny collar half way down the bodice.

Emotional Effects On Asthma
By H. N. BUNDESEN M.D.

D^r Francis M. Rackerman of this Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston, told the recent convention of the American Medical Association that an asthma attack may follow the accumulated pressure of work and worry. That a nervous man under long and constant pressure of a home with wife, children, work, worries, and family troubles can develop asthma of the susceptibility had existed in these persons.

Dr. Rackerman said that the emotional basis for the disease should be especially considered if asthma develops after the fact. Common sense should also be taken into account when the parents whose children are disposed toward asthma to strive hard to induce calm and happy emotions in them. Doing so involves no end of effort at self-discipline by parent and generous of guiding the growing child in a serene and happy family atmosphere.

London Children's Underworld

MANY people who walk along the streets of London, and see the children in the street, are sitting entranced in a new and delightful world. There has been a recent addition to London's little playhouses, and here, in a basement beneath the Strand, is the new Watergate Theatre, which, during the school holidays, has been inviting the youngest of all the children to share in a theatre of their own.

Christmas entertainment included matinee performances by members of Britain's Magic Circle—an organisation of conjurers and illusionists—and a presentation of "The House by the Side of the Road," a native play by Charles Williams.

Marionettes Delight

Then, for three weeks in January, was arranged an End-of-the-Holidays Party, with afternoons and evenings crammed with excitement, and John Wright's marionettes contributing to the enjoyment with performances of "The Honey Bird," a narrative play based on an African legend.

John Wright, arrived in Britain from the Union of South Africa in 1946. His marionettes have since appeared five times in television, in theatres, schools and hospitals, and on the cinema screen.

JACQUES FATH SHOWS A BOYISH STYLE

Paris. dress-up fabrics in which his versions are made. A model shows lustrous peacock blue satin, with trim stitched in self tone, and with the ventilator eyelets at the side also trimmed to match. Like all of the Fath hats, the style is worn back on the head to show the hairline at front.

This may be the forerunner of a revival of the fedora and other mannish styles popular when the original "garconne" fashion in dresses was big in the '20s.

Popular Overskirt

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

The overskirt is a detail that is very much on top this season. It is used to give added interest to the plain dress of a dress in navy satin. The overskirt is of changeable, iridescent navy and green satin, and is draped over the hips up to a bow at the side front. The bare top has a one-sided curled bodice. The underskirt is cut on the bias and reveals a bit of the leg.

Heavy Crepes Gain

Crepe, in silk, wool, and rayon, gained ground this mid-season, particularly those in silk and those with body, such as heavy falling flat crepes or marocain. Lanvin used the latter, and flat crepes were seen in a number of houses.

Afternoon Chiffons

Chiffon in plain colour appeared in several collections. Paquin had a couple of women's afternoon dresses in soft, draped style. Deeds used it both for afternoon and evening. Other houses, notably Fauch, preferred the crepe silk organdie for afternoon dresses.

Tweeds and Flannels

Tweeds were big, in mixtures and in bold black and window-pane plaids and discreet tiny two-colour checks, but except for tweeds, there was little emphasis on the heavy, warm-looking coatings that had such a play in earlier showings. Which can be easily explained by the comparatively small number of coats shown. Rochas used Moureaux' "Bursak" which has hopsacking surface and velvet reverse for one or two coats, and few chinchillas were noted, but otherwise—except for sports tweeds—most of the coats were in plain colour, only moderately heavy woollens of velours or flannel type. Flannel registered well for little suits and dresses, and other weaves noted in many showings included gabardines, ticotines, crepes with dry handle,

Make Bathing a Beauty Rite

Nice for travelling is this bath set that comes in a plastic bag. It contains talcum, after-bath lotion, soap and tissues; has room for other articles.

By HELEN FOLLETT

WHEN it comes to bathing, some women are keen about the tub, others like the shower. A third contingent will take both. And they are on the right beauty track.

This is the system, while the tub is filling, they wash face and neck in the wash bowl, frictioning in the lather, rinsing well. They hop into the warm water, go over the body surface with a brush that takes hold like a guilty conscience, using plenty of soap and shaking off dead skin scales that are ever present. They give special attention to elbows, knees and the backs of their hands. The cutaneous surface is coarse at those areas, have little creases that pick up atmospheric dust.

So far so good. Then for an alternating hot and cold shower, that will ring the bell for all the blood streams to get active. There will be a more luxurious feeling if both lotions are at hand. Both suits will not only impart fragrance, but will soften the water, make the bath more cleansing.

To insure against tiny red points that we call goose flesh for want of a better and more elegant name, one should have a friction with a bath tonic, the alcoholic content of which will act as a refining influence upon the skin.

Or, one may prefer a talcum friction. If the skin is inclined to chafe, or to become dry, because of lack of moisture in the air, use a borated talcum which acts as a medication.

If you go in for fancy soaps you will find some new offerings at the toiletries departments. These items take on attractive forms, come in nifty boxes, make nice presents for your girl friend! Among the newest of these sets of bath toiletries is a green plastic bag which contains after-bath lotion, a box of talcum powder, a cake of quick-lathering soap and a pack of tissues. Also included are miniature bottles of bubble bath and hand lotion. The bag makes a nice travel companion.

Let's Eat

Menu Of An Opera Singer

"HERE'S something that will interest you, Chef, a complete set of menus that were served on the opening day of the opera to the greatest tenor that ever lived," I said.

"You mean Enrico Caruso, Madam?"

"No one else, and I got them from his own private chef, John Trassano, now exclusive chef of the Hotel Vanderbilt in New York City, where Caruso lived in an 18-room penthouse."

"As a singing Chef, I would be very much interested to know what the great singer Caruso ate on the day of a performance."

Demi Tasse

"About eleven o'clock in the morning he started the day with a demi tasse. Luncheon was at 1.30 and always substantial. He didn't eat much, but always liked to have his plate well filled."

"Late in the afternoon, tea or coffee and hors d'oeuvre decorated canapés were served. A good idea for our readers to follow, especially if they are entertaining men as well as women. They were what I call substantial canapés; small rolls split, buttered and covered with anchovy fillets or with Bel Paese cheese, thin salmon or smoked salmon, white fish or sturgeon."

"One of Caruso's favourites was quite unusual, Chef. Short Italian bread sticks with a small piece of prosciutto (Italian ham) rolled around each, and a sprig of water cress tucked in each end. Paper-thin slices of boiled ham could be used the same way."

"Was dinner served to Signor Caruso?"

"Not on days when he had an operatic performance."

"Ah, but after his triumph at the opera, what a supper Signor Caruso must have eaten."

"And he always had guests. And such a gorgeous menu."

Midnight Supper After The Opera Given by Enrico Caruso

Small Assorted Canapés: Hot Hors d'oeuvre, Cold Hors d'oeuvre, Pimientos with Anchovy Fillets and Capers. Soup: Onion Soup with Croutons and Grated Parmesan Cheese. Entrees, Vegetables and Salad: Lasagne (wide egg noodles) with Sauce Marinara, Devilled Potatoes, Roast Baby Lamb, Potato Balls, O'Gratin Potatoes, Julienne String Beans, Lima Beans with Mushrooms, Belgian Endive Salad.

Recipe: Serve Four

Sauce Marinara (With Clams)

For spaghetti or lasagne. Measure 2 tbsp. olive or vegetable oil into a 2-qt.-sized sauce pan. Add 1 crushed peeled section garlic and saute. Then add 1 (No. 2½) tin solid pack tomatoes and simmer 10 min. Add 1 (12 oz.) tin chopped clams and liquid, ¼ tsp. oregano, 1 tsp. salt and ¼ tsp. pepper. Simmer until very thick, about 40 min.

Lasagne or Stuffed Noodles

Make sauce marinara; boil 1 lb. wide egg noodles until barely tender; drain. Oil a 2-qt. shallow baking dish. Spoon in 1/3 of the sauce. Then spread on 1/3 of the noodles. Layer with grated Parmesan (or sharp American) cheese and sliced dry Italian sausage (or use salami). Add a little Mozzarella cheese (cottage cheese can be substituted). Continue until all ingredients are used, finishing with sauce and grated cheese. Bake 20 min. at 375 F.

A Noble Tribute To A Beautiful Life

I AM in my ninetieth year and hope soon to be at rest. Let my last effort be to pay a tribute to a very beautiful life and a perfect marriage, never once clouded, during forty-four years, by any shadow of disagreement or misunderstanding.

The continued strain of long-keeping and hope soon to be at rest. Let my last effort be to pay a tribute to a very beautiful life and a perfect marriage, never once clouded, during forty-four years, by any shadow of disagreement or misunderstanding.

In April, 1949, I had to go to London for the election of the British Academy and other business, and she set her heart on accompanying me. A full list of engagements was made, and she took a fortnight of complete rest at the Arundel House to prepare for the ordeal, which her doctors, rather to my distress, did not forbid.

WE were given hospitality at Lord Beaverbrook's. But at Arlington House, and enjoyed luncheon with the architect who improved our house at Highbury, Lord Mollison and Paul Paget, and with Mr. and Mrs. Amery on the day before her death.

We were to have gone to the Archbishop of Canterbury, to Mrs. Neville Chamberlain, to Lady Haversdale and to my publisher, before our return home. I went to my good night to her on the night of the 22nd, and she seemed quite comfortable.

April 23 was "Richard's day," as she called it, "now it is my day," she would have said if she had known that her call had come.

She had a heart attack such as she had often had before, and then lost consciousness. I was not summoned, of course, she would have sent for me if she had known she was dying.

My elder son was informed by telegram, and came at once in the small hours. It fell to him to tell me the sad news, for I never expected it, my specialist had given an encouraging report only two days before. He wrote to me that he did not expect it but knew that it was possible.

It was the end that he would have wished for her; she might have had much to suffer. Most to us, I think, would choose such a death if we were prepared for it, as she certainly was.

We met first in 1904, at the house of my uncle, F. G. Inge, a noted Oxford cricketer, who held what was then a family

Mrs. Mary Catherine Inge, wife of Dr. W. R. Inge, the former Dean of St. Paul's, died last April at the age of 69 after 44 years of marriage. Now Dr. Inge has written a tribute to her. It is printed in his Diary of a Dean (just published by Hutchinson, 21s.).

It is a noble and sonorous leave-taking, exquisitely phrased and profoundly moving.

Inge in the gift of my father, the late Mr. and Mrs. Inge, Dean of St. Paul's.

We took long walks together on Canonbury Chase, and soon after became engaged. It was a great change for me, since Canon Inge had just offered me the living of All Saints, Finsbury, which had been offered to me by the Bishop of London. We were married in the following spring by Archbishop Davidson, a cousin of my wife, in Canterbury Cathedral, and we spent our honeymoon at Giverny. My wife was a granddaughter of Harvey Goodwin, Bishop of Exeter, and she was always happy in the Lake district.

MY new work was entirely new to me, and I could not have done it without her help. The vicarage was at 24, Rutland Gate, a quiet square, my old friend Sir Francis Galton lived almost next door.

The parish was aristocratic, with a preponderance of rather elderly people. Three of his Majesty's judges, Lord Halsbury, Lord Macnaghten, and Lord Darling, sat under me, and Bishop Pakenham, afterwards Master of the Rolls. But there were also several ladies in black bonnets, who preferred simple fare, so the preaching was rather difficult.

The golden age of the West End incumbents had come to an end, and I was often discouraged, fearing that I was a failure. In reality I kept my congregation together fairly well, and Kitty would not allow me to be anxious. She soon made many friends in the parish, and managed her household well, which I was quite incapable of doing.

WE were only less than three years in Rutland Gate. The Lady Margaret professorship at Cambridge fell vacant, and I was asked to stand for it. This is the oldest chair in the university, and has been held by many distinguished theologians. I counted it a great honour when I was elected.

The main work of a professor is to give lectures, which have to be rather simple, since the intellectual level of young men who are preparing for ordination is not, on an average, very high. But in each year there were two or three really able men, and these used to come to my house for a little more advanced study.

The work suited me exactly, and in the long vacations I was able to do a great deal of reading and writing. My home life was ideally happy. I find in my diary such entries as "every year that I spend with Kitty is better than the last."

This I think is the way with a perfectly happy marriage. Love at first is a comparatively poor thing, an external attraction with but small knowledge of the character of one's partner. But it changes by degrees into something holier and more spiritual, as the exquisite beauty of God's grace in a very human person unfolds itself more and more visibly.

"Marriage is the best thing in human life," my mother used to say. St. Paul missed it, but he knew that through faith and hope "abide" indissoluble, love is greater than faith or hope.

"LOVE is as strong as death," many bereaved men must have felt, as I am feeling now, the truth of Shakespeare's beautiful words (Much Ado About Nothing, Act 4, Scene 1).

The idea of her life shall sweetly creep into his study of imagination. And every lovely organ of her life shall come appared in more precious habit. More moving, delicate and full of life.

Into the eye and prospect of his soul. Than when she lived indeed. I found among her papers a sealed packet addressed "To my dear husband, to be opened after my death." It was written, not after her death began to fail, but at Rutland Gate in 1900, just before the birth of our first-born.

Like many in her generation, she greatly exaggerated with our Prayer Book, absurdly calls the great peril of childbirth. Statistically the chances are about 250 to 1 in favour of the mother. She wrote: "My own Best-beloved, I am quite alone this evening. I wish to tell you a

THE GREATEST STORY EVER TOLD

Concluding Fulton Oursler's story of the life and death of Jesus Christ

ONE of the robbers, Gestas, took up the cry from the onlookers and spat it out with blood and foam at his mouth:

"If You be the Christ, save Yourself — and us!" But Dysmas, on the right-hand cross, called back to him:

"Neither do you fear God, seeing that you are under the same condemnation. And we, indeed, justly because we receive the due reward of our deeds. But this man has done no evil."

Then, turning his head toward the Master, he said with pleading sweetness, amazing in so rough a voice:

Lord, remember me when You shall come into Your kingdom.

The cyclops of Jesus flew up, and He smiled. It was a smile of love and sweat, but He called out boldly, in His old clear, strong voice:

So be it, I say to you, this day, you shall be with Me in Paradise.

No Ordinary Storm

THE storm was gathering. Its darkness now, the air of the black streets was getting murkier by the minute with a wrack of clouds and dark fluting vapour scudding across the sky. There was a low, rolling sound of thunder, a rumble swelling to a roar and crash over the heads of the people. As the rain came, many scattered, but others remained to meet nothing.

Even the most venturesome of the poor mob began to feel a germ of fear. The sun was lost behind the thickening nimbus overhead and there was a low and constant murmuring among the people. Turnoff and park were ready to break out into mob madness. This, they began to feel, was no ordinary storm; this was a brooding, deepening, lightless storm of sinister intensity.

It was close upon three o'clock in the afternoon, when, for the fourth time, they heard Jesus speak.

Eloi, Eloi, Lamma sabachthani! "My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me?"

Standing near the feet of the cross, Calphurn, hearing those words, gave a loud chuckle of delight. Seizing his old father-in-law's withered wrist, he rejoiced.

"Hear that, Lord Annas? His followers will never be able to live down those words. First He says, 'He is God,' then He asks Himself why He has forsaken Himself. Pretty come, don't you think?"

There was a terrible peal of thunder. But presently Calphurn heard the voice of Annas, despondent and disheartened. "You are high priest, Calphurn, but you do not even remember your Scriptures. Especially the Twenty-second Psalm, which begins, 'My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken me?' and goes on to prophesy perhaps what happened today—even to the parting of his garments."

"Father-in-law, you're not joking."

"I am going home," sighed Annas, and turned his back on his son-in-law.

And Annas might also have reminded Calphurn that the very next Psalm declared the Lord as the Good Shepherd: "Even though I walk in the dark valley I fear no evil, for You are at my side."

With an uncertain smile down upon His mother and His other loved ones, Jesus had spoken the words as King David anciently predicted, without further protest He let the vinegar from the sponge pour down into His parched throat and He spoke the sixth time from the cross:

"It is consummated."

Calphurn then knew what that meant. The whole body of prophecies of the old prophets had been fulfilled, his own prophecies well. They had said that the Messiah would be born in Bethlehem, the city of David. There Jesus had been born, and in stable, as also prophesied—all the long story was full of millstones, verifications, credentials, from the old prophets that He, Jesus, now in His pain and humiliation, was the promised Messiah.

"It is consummated!" Having said that He took a deep breath and spoke out softly, so that Mary remembered. He would often speak when He was a boy, falling off to sleep, on His bed in Nazareth—softly and with a tone of surrender and relief.

Father, into Your hands I commend my spirit."

And bowing His head, He gave up the ghost.

Thus it was that Jesus of Nazareth died, about four o'clock in the murky air of Good Friday afternoon.

The Earth Trembled

MEN told strange stories afterward; tales of how the veil of the Temple was torn into two pieces, the rainbow veil that hung at the Holy of Holies and hid the innermost altar from the eyes of all except priests, rent and ripped, from top to bottom, although no man's hand had touched it.

Tales of a trembling of the earth and rocks crashing from hillside; graves ripped open, their white domes splitting wide. All this was talk behind the hand, because the priests would reticulate on any of their own who had a sympathetic or significant word to say about this execution.

Those at the cross who loved Him bent their breasts and sobbed. The Roman officer who had given all the orders for the execution of the death sentence turned his back on the women and gazed. Perhaps it was the earthquake that weighed the man down, or perhaps the darkness. Or it may have been the face of Mary, then, cleaning his mouth with an oblong of silk, he turned to one of his lieutenants and gasped:

"Indeed this man was the Son of God."

The Treasury Claims Dollar Hoards

From FREDERICK COOK in New York

DETERMINED efforts are being made by the British Treasury to gain possession of a "hidden hoard" of dollars owned by Britons living in Britain. The hoard is believed to total millions.

So quietly have the first official moves been made that they are unknown to all except a select group of Wall Street lawyers.

The existence of this hidden hoard has long been suspected. Now it has been uncovered by the investigations of British officials here.

It explains the great post-war mystery of how some British visitors to the U.S.A., with a limited dollar allotment, or none at all, are able to winter luxuriously in Florida or live for months in $50-a-day suites in New York.

Under wartime regulations Britons owing United States securities had to surrender them for sterling.

But a considerable number of cash balances in American banks were not disclosed.

Now a series of test cases are being launched with the object of securing a ruling from an American court that American banks holding such deposits may be forced under American law to pay them over to the British Government.

One such case now before the New York Supreme Court concerns money deposited with the Bankers' Trust Company, one of New York's Big Five, by Mrs. Margaret Louisa Maitland-Tennent, of Cammo House, Crumond Bridge, Midlothian.

The deposit was made many years ago and, with interest, now amounts to $17,292 (worth £20,320) before devaluation, now worth £41,800. No withdrawals have ever been made from this account.

Mrs. Maitland-Tennent, it was said during the proceedings, is in her eighties, and has not visited America for many years.

CLUB OR INTERNATIONAL INTERESTS THE MORE IMPORTANT?

BY ARCHIE QUICK

The question whether Club interests or International interests should have major importance finds contrasting answers from Portsmouth and Newcastle United. The Lord Mayor of Portsmouth, Alderman John Privett, who is also Vice-Chairman of the Football Club, told me that they had an offer to tour the Argentine in May. For six matches they were guaranteed £12,000 net and £500 per head first class travelling expenses, but they said the Board of Directors would almost certainly turn it down because of the possible International calls on some of their players.

Dickinson, Froggatt, Flewin, Butler, Harris were all England possibilities and Scouler might be wanted for Scotland, said the Alderman, and as far as England was concerned there were trips to Lisbon, Brussels, Rio and Canada. Despite the temptation of a pleasant holiday and an assured profit, England had to come first.

On the other hand Scotland will probably want Brennan of Newcastle and England take Jackie Milburn, but United will almost certainly tour Switzerland in May just the same. To Director Stanley Seymour I put the question: "Are you in favour of the selected 26 England players for Rio being gathered together the whole of March, April and May so that team understanding may be fostered?" The answer was "No." Mr Seymour says the Club puts the League and club supporters first.

Seymour, who was a great outside left for England, told me that although he has always been connected with United he had not visited Fratton Park this year on December 17, when he played for New Zealand in a Cup tie 25 years ago.

FOUR KOs IN HOLF BOXING

Four knockouts and two technical knockouts were the highlights of a very poor exhibition in the preliminary round of the HOLF individual Boxing Championships at Murray Barracks last night.

What looked like being the best bout of the evening stopped in the first round when L. B. Walters was a second time getting up after a knock down and the fight was awarded to C. J. J. Barrage. The bout of the Buffs, once again fought Pte Brennan, also of the Buffs, and Barrage won on a split decision. Brennan was not outed twice for holding and on the third he lost the fight. Brennan used the same tactic in outpointing Barrage last year in the later Services Championships and on that occasion it was surprising that the bout was not stopped.

NOTHING TO CHANCE
Barrage left nothing to chance in his next bout against C. J. Hill and the latter was KO'd in the first round after some heavy punching by both combatants.

Pte Atkinhead in the welter class came out hot, but Sgt. C. W. Hughes in the solar plexus and followed up with a one-two to the head. The bout lasted 51 seconds.

Gnr Hughes in the next bout decided that he would do the same thing with Pte Atkinhead and in 67 seconds Atkinhead was on the canvas. He was carried from the ring after some time obviously in great pain.

Pte Ware lost the flyweight semi-final to Gnr Atkinhead on the only bad decision of the evening. It was apparent to Atkinhead that he did not expect the win from the expression on his face when the decision was announced.

The fixtures arranged for this evening have been cancelled and will take place tomorrow night at 9 p.m.

THE RESULTS

Lightweight—First Series
Gnr Stephenson (27 HAA) outpointed Pte. G. Smith (RASC). Gnr Codd (27 HAA) outpointed L. B. Walters (27 HAA). L. B. Walters (27 HAA) beat Pte. Henson (RASC). T. K. O. second round, Cpl. J. J. J. (RASC) outpointed Gnr. Dyke (27 HAA).

Welterweight—First Series
Pte. Atkinhead (RASC) KO'd Sgt. C. W. Hughes (ACC). Gnr. Hughes (27 HAA) KO'd Pte. Atkinhead (RASC). First round.

Middleweight—First Series
Gnr. Dalry (27 HAA) outpointed Pte. Shields (RASC). Pte. Barrage (RASC) beat Pte. Brennan (Buffs) disqualified for holding.

Flyweight Semi-Final
Gnr. Atkinhead (27 HAA) outpointed Pte. Ware (RASC).

Lightweight Semi-Finals
Gnr. Codd (27 HAA) beat Gnr. Smith (27 HAA). T. K. O. second round. Cpl. J. J. J. (RASC) KO'd L. B. Walters (27 HAA). First round.

Middleweight Semi-Finals
Pte. Barrage (Buffs) KO'd Cpl. Hill (RASC). First round.

MILBURN'S INJURY

One of the most interesting moments of the game was the injury to Jackie Milburn. The England centre forward hurt himself at Cardiff on October 20, 1948, but it was not until he had to go off the field to have a cramp. He had been playing for the first time since he was injured. HOME FOOTBALL

Chelsea May Hold Manchester United

London, Jan. 10.—After the Cup battles last Saturday and the replays during this week for 18 clubs, English soccer teams return to the quest of League points next Saturday.

Home winners look predominant but there are also many tricky encounters. One of these is the Manchester United v. Chelsea match at Manchester. At first glance this would appear to be a good win for the United, who are playing grand football and pressing the leaders of the Division strongly.

It must be remembered, however, that Chelsea, though only about half way in the table, have one of the best away records in the League and the better their opponents the better they appear to play.

Blackpool, who have shown improved form recently and are now well in the race for the Championship, should win at home against Aston Villa, one of the teams with a Cup replay tomorrow.

Cardiff and Hury clash at Cardiff and this is another open affair. Cardiff are not very consistent and the likely Hury side may get a point.

Hull, like Cardiff, have a Cup replay to settle before next Saturday, when they will be at home to Chesterfield. Hull are well up with the leaders in the Second Division, but their defence has cracked on a number of occasions recently.

Against a Chesterfield side which appears to have lost its punch they should win.

West Ham United have dropped too many points at home this season and with two of their best players injured and doubtful for Saturday, Sheffield United could easily snatch a point.—Reuter.

CUP REPLAYS
Fulham, Charlton Athletic and West Bromwich Albion are with a First Division club with Cup replays on Wednesday. Fulham next Saturday will be at home to Manchester City and should win despite this extra game, but Charlton are not expected to come away from Newcastle with a point, while West Bromwich Albion, a sound home side, should win against Stoke, who are playing without confidence.

Another close match will be at Derby, where Derby are the victors. Burnley have one of the soundest defences in the League but they will be hard pressed against the vastly improved Derby side, who should collect both points.

SHOULD BE CLOSE
The match at Barnsley, where Grimsby Town will be the visitors, should be a very close game. Both sides are average and a draw is likely. Barnsley were knocked out of the Cup by their Third Division opponents last Saturday and they will have to keep a watchful eye on Grimsby's sharp-shooting centre-forward, Tommy Briggs, the leading goal scorer in the Football League.

Blackburn, who have disappointed this season, gave their supporters something to shout about last Saturday, when they held the League leaders, Liverpool, to a draw.

In spite of a Cup replay tomorrow they are taken to win at home against Leicester City on Saturday.

WIN FOR BRENTFORD?
Brentford and Bradford were both eliminated from the Cup last Saturday although playing at home. Brentford put up a good show against their First Division opponents, but Bradford were knocked out by a Third Division club and on this showing, coupled with their League positions, the match is taken for a home win for Brentford.

MATCHES POSTPONED
Army v. Navy, 1st Division League, on Saturday, at So. Kumpoo.

Army v. C.A.A., 2nd Division League, on Saturday, at So. Kumpoo.

The First Division game between the Army and the Navy will take place today at So. Kumpoo at 4 p.m.

HKFA COUNCIL MEETING
A meeting of the Hongkong Football Association Council will be held at the Association's rooms on Tuesday, January 17 at 5.30 p.m.

GERMANS MAY BE Re-Admitted To Motor-Cycling
Frankfurt, Jan. 10.—The next International Motorcycling Congress, to be held in Madrid, may be held in Madrid on the occasion of the incorporation of German Motorcycling Commission (OMK) into the International body.

M. Julius Koethel, President of the German Automobile Club, said today that negotiations for international racing events had been a complete success.

M. Piet Mortier, the Dutch President of the International Federation, has begun talks with leading German delegates here, as decided in Paris last November.—Reuter.

JOHNNY LEACH IN French Table Tennis Final
Paris, Jan. 10.—The World Champion, Johnny Leach, of Britain, reached the final of the Men's Singles in the French International Table Tennis Championships here tonight when he beat the French Champion, Michel Haguenauer, by 21-17, 12-21, 20-22, 25-23, 21-20 in the semi-finals.

Both players won much applause through the hard-fought match.

The other semi-final was an All British affair, in which Richard Bergman, holder of the title, beat Aubrey Simons by 21-19, 14-21, 21-13, 21-14 and qualified to meet Leach in the final.

Bergman's greater experience was the telling factor in this match.

Mrs Vera Thomas, the English International, won the Women's Singles title. In the final she beat Miss Jeanne Day, of France, by 21-9, 21-14, 21-10. The French girl was outclassed by Mrs Thomas, who played at great speed throughout the match.—Reuter.

GINGER CHALLENGES LACE PANTIES

Wimbledon never gets so excited as when a tennis costume makes news. At last year's tournament, Gertrude "Gorgeous Gussie" Moran displayed the lace panties she had designed for herself. For the coming season, Hollywood star Ginger Rogers sets the fashion with baggy shorts. Will Wimbledon take to them?

THE OLD FIGHTING SPIRIT IS NEEDED IN SPORT

SAYS ALAN HOBY

There is a tendency at this time, when there have been heavy calls on the bismuth tablets, to make a number of New Year resolutions. There is an equal tendency, when the festive junketings are only a gaudy memory, for these good intentions to fade away like deceitful friends.

We must not allow this to happen to sport in 1950. As the first half of the 20th century rolled to its climax it can claim that soccer, cricket, and boxing were along.

To coin a phrase, they had lost their "spirit of adventure". They were "tamed", "civilized", "confining".

County cricket and League football, in particular, were becoming steadily saltier and of all that is ridiculous, dashing, and unorthodox.

THE ADVENTURERS
For who are the men you will remember from the dead years 1900-49?

I'll tell you. They are the individualists, the Great Adventurers, the Apostles of pure aggression. Here are a few: Jack Dempsey, Jimmy Wilde, Kid Lewis, Joe Louis, Jack Peterson, Don Burdick, Fred Perry, Bill Tilden, Don Bradman, Frank Woolley, Percy Hedges, Harold Larwood, Steve Bloomer, Billy Meredith, Stanley Matthews, Ted Drake, Steve Donaghy, Wally Hammond, Alex James, Alec Jackson, Douglas Jardine, Henry Cotton, Jack Lovelock, Joe Davis, Walter Lindrum.

What was the spark that set their genius ablaze? It was their personality—a blue-steel resolution which stemmed from the hidden fires within. That was their greatness.

But today? And tomorrow? Our two national games, soccer and cricket are in a ruinous rut. The character is slowly ebbing from them. Over the years they have become drearily, almost dim-wittedly, defensive.

In county and Test cricket this attitude of mind is characterised by a fantastic ultra-caution which consists of watching the ball on to the bat to the last blade of grass and the last fraction of a second.

Nowadays the main motif of what was once the glorious game of Grace, Trumper, Macartney, and Woolley seems to lie in the painful compilation of personal averages.

"STOPPER" CREED
In soccer the modern trend is symbolised by the stopper centre-half and that sterile, defensive creed which has as its cardinal commandment: "Stop the other side from winning and we can't lose."

Everything to plan. Everything card-indexed, everyone governed by a fear of losing. No wonder individuality and artistry are withering away.

In professional football, of course, one of the reasons for this is a new-type director. To him soccer is a business. Results count.

Under this type the manager is all too frequently a stooge while brilliant young natural ball players are ordered to "get rid of it."

Another reason is the atrocious transfer system which should be abolished. Under this system clubs are encouraged to buy ready-made "stars" for enormous sums instead of building up their own talent.

SLUGGERS NOW
Boxing? This is bad enough. I think, however, that it will recover more speedily in the new-dawning half-century than soccer and cricket.

But even here the "noble art of self-defence"—footwork, shifting, feinting, blocking—are giving way for pure slugging, just as speed is destroying the science in football.

If you think pugilism hasn't declined, consider some of our pre-war champions—Len Harvey, Tommy Farr, Jack McAvoy, Jack Hood, Dave Crowley, Ernie Rodcliffe, Ray Ryan, Neil Taitford, Johnny Lynch, Jackie Brown, Benny Lynde, and then think again.

GIVE THEM HOPE
There are many problems confronting sport from 1950 onwards, and we cannot continue to brush them aside like crumbs off a cravat.

Let us have wonderful youngsters. Give them hope, incentive. Forget the regimentation and the assembly lines. Remember that the best way to play—and win—is to get after your man; go after the runs and goals.

We want a new spirit—or rather a resurgence of the old spirit. The urge that drove Henry Cotton in 1928 to buy a return ticket to America and gamble nearly the whole of his savings on a tour of the States—just to get the experience.

"Although I was up among the English players," declared Henry, "I wanted to do better and beat them all."

And that's a pretty good New Year resolution for anyone. "RAN IN RAPTURE"
"He ran in a rapture." After 13 years this phrase still burns in my mind.

It was part of a tribute to Jack Lovelock written by the late E. A. Montague after Lovelock's greatest triumph—his wonderful Olympic victory in the 1,500 metres at Berlin, 1936.

"There never was such a runner as Hogan," adds Montague, and I agree.

That afternoon Lovelock, whose tragic death has deeply shocked all sportsmen, beat Glen Cunningham (U.S.), Luigi Beccali (Italy), Archie San Roman (U.S.), Phil Edwards (Canada), and Jerry Cornes, his old Oxford colleague, who was sixth.

PERFECT ACTION
"Lovelock would have beaten any runner on that day," confirms colleague Guy Butler. He literally flowed over the most perfect action of all time. He literally flowed over the "cinder-path."

Few people know that when Lovelock fell from his horse while hunting years ago he lay unconscious on the ground for several hours before he was found.

SOLD OUT
London, Jan. 9.—Promoter Jack Solomons said today that he has sold all 18,000 tickets for the Joey Maxim-Fredddie Mills world lightweight title fight here on January 24.

Gross receipts for full house will be about £265,000. Maxim said his share is 20 percent of gross, which would be £53,000. Mills' cut has not been disclosed. Tickets for the Earl's Court arena were sealed from five guineas down to 10 shillings.—Associated Press.

IRC TEAM
The following will represent the Indian Recreation Club in their first division league cricket match against the R.A.F. at Sookunpoo on Saturday: S. A. Ismail (Capt.), A. R. Abbas, I. Ali, F. M. al Aureili, A. B. Bakar, A. R. H. Ismail, A. R. Kitchell, A. H. Madar, Mohideen, I. M. Omar, M. I. A. Razack. Umpire: Mr. G. M. Butt. Scorer: Mr. A. M. Wahnab.

BEN HOGAN'S COMEBACK
Los Angeles, Jan. 9.—Bantam Ben Hogan, firing five birdies, picked up three strokes on first-place Jerry Barber in the US$15,000 Los Angeles golf tournament at the end of three rounds of play today.

Hogan fired a two under par 69 for a total of 211, compared with Barber's 72, which gave the tiny unknown from Pasadena, California, 209. Hogan's round was marred by three bogles on the back nine when his putter went sour on him.

His par-breaking performance was his second 69 in two days and another lap in the gallant little Texan's comeback story. He was out in 32, three under par. His drive on the tenth got him in trouble and he bogged the hole with a five, but he came back to birdie the 69-yard 11th hole with a four after dropping a 120-yard approach within 10 inches of the cup.

PUTTS MISSED
Hogan missed putts to bogie the 14th and 15th holes, but birdied the par three 145-yard 16th when he played his tee shot six feet from the pit, but he came back to birdie the 69-yard 11th hole with a four after dropping a 120-yard approach within 10 inches of the cup.

Yugoslav Reds Plan Campaign

REPLY TO COMINFORM CONDEMNATION

Belgrade, Jan. 10.—The Yugoslav Communists are believed to be about to open an intense ideological campaign to win world Communist and left-wing support for Marshal Tito. The campaign, aimed at Moscow, would be launched as a reply to the Cominform's most recent condemnation of the Yugoslav Communists as "Fascists."

Such, at least, is the interpretation placed here upon an increasing number of public speeches and articles in the press branding the Soviet leaders as traitors to the Communist faith.

One senior Yugoslav Government official stated recently that the issue today is whether there is to be genuine democracy among Communists and their parties, or whether they are to continue to take their orders from the Kremlin. Yugoslavia, he added, stands for democracy.

The Yugoslavs believe that when Marxists in other countries learn the true facts about Marshal Tito's quarrel with the Russian Bolshevik Party, they will side with Yugoslavia.

Purges of Tito sympathizers in East European satellite Communist parties are regarded here as an indication that the Marxist world is already beginning to move round to the Yugoslav position. There are indications that Yugoslavia's ideological campaign against the Soviet will be conducted on two levels.

1. Straight political propaganda aimed at the Communist world. 2. Serious application of Marxist analysis to the Soviet regime itself in an effort to prove to the satisfaction of Communists elsewhere that it has gone off the Marxist-Leninist rails.

DEPORTATIONS

The Belgrade literary paper, Kulturne Novine, took the straight political line in an article on "Greater Russian Chauvinism" recently. The article, in effect, threw back charges of Fascism in the teeth of the Cominform. By pointing out the Soviet leaders of genocide (more extermination).

The paper demanded to know how the Soviet Government could square its abolition of many autonomous republics and areas in Russia after the war and the deportation of the peoples of these areas with the charges of genocide.

The deportation of Chinese, Tartars, Kalmyks, Buriats, Chechens and Ingushes in Siberia amounted the paper declared, to the "destruction of the nationalities because they have been deprived of the possibility of living their own lives and of the freedom to develop their own national culture."

"These are facts that no one can deny. Yet they call for a reply."

DELHI LOOKS FOR MONKEY CATCHERS

New Delhi, Jan. 10.—Want an interesting outdoor job with lots of live prospects? Delhi needs a monkey catcher.

The field has not been worked for several years. The last Pakistani after the communal riots of 1947 before getting down to work. Hindus will not take the job because, to them, monkeys are sacred.

On a per head basis, one could make many rupees. The place is full of monkeys. They tear up monuments in historical places, pay visits to banks and homes, make life unbearable for people trying to sleep outdoors and break up golf games by stealing the balls.

Moreover, they sometimes become vicious. Several cases of monkey bites have been reported.

TWO CANDIDATES

The Delhi Municipal Committee searched for more than a year before it located two prospective monkey catchers down in Bombay Presidency. The Committee is now studying their tenders.

One, Sheikh Bab Bapu Mulia, quotes seven rupees per monkey if the number caught runs to 200, five rupees if between 200 and 500, and four rupees if between 500 and 1,000. He also wants two coolies to help him, accommodation for his staff of eight men and police assistance where necessary. The other prospect, Ismail Khan, asks three rupees per monkey plus living and board.

Any monkey captured will be deported, rather than killed. Municipal President Yudhvir Singh is said to favour highly of a proposal to send them to the United States.

They could, he says, become an important dollar earner. Associated Press.

Crocodile Man

Mr. Peter Peters flew into London recently from Singapore to sell 500 crocodile skins worth £3,750, result of six months' hunting in the Malayan swamps. He intends to go back and kill more, and with him will go his Dutch-born wife, Dirkje. She goes on hunts with her husband, thinks spearing crocodiles in the middle of the night "great sport," but spiders scare her.

Acheson Explains His China Policy To Republicans

Washington, Jan. 10.—The chief Republican critics of the Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Acheson, were allowed to hear his defence of the Administration's China policy today, but were denied permission to question him.

SEEKING TO EVOLVE SIGN LANGUAGE

Singapore, Jan. 10.—A Chinese, ex-professor of Shanghai University, who has travelled through remote areas and jungles of four Asian countries, to evolve a new sign language intelligible for all races, has arrived in Singapore.

The professor, Mr. Tong, has been working for the last few years on his project, which he calls "Sign Language for All Races."

His aim, he explained, is to study the origin of various Asian races, their economic and social problems, and ultimately to evolve, and piece together, the different physical and mental expressions into a kind of a new sign language through which various races can more easily make themselves understood, to take the place of existing spoken languages.

He added that he had been able to travel about freely and make himself understood in every village he had visited through a careful study of gestures and expressions peculiar to respective areas.

Professor Tong said that he intended to spend another 13 years in the remote areas of Malaya, Borneo, Indonesia, the Philippines and India to pursue his studies.—Reuter.

Mme CHIANG RETURNING

Chicago, Jan. 10.—Weary Madame Chiang Kai-shek stopped here briefly today on the first lap of her flight to join her husband in Formosa. At Midway Airport, she told newsmen that she hoped to reach Formosa "in a few days."

From here she is flying to San Francisco, and then to Manila, from where she will proceed to Formosa.

Asked for comment on the shelling of the Flying Arrow by Chinese Nationalist warships, she replied: "I think your own State Department has stated the answer to that very well."

She denied rumours that she had bought a ranch in Arizona. "I have not one inch of foreign property anywhere in any part of the world," she said.—United Press.

Wafd-Farouk Differences Are Denied

London, Jan. 10.—The Egyptian Embassy said today that British press reports on differences between King Farouk and the Wafd Party, winner of the recent Egyptian general election, are untrue and are being made by "mischief makers."

The Embassy issued a statement saying that "such insinuations are completely without foundation and can only be based on false assumptions and the misrepresentation of the loyal relations which exist between the King and all political parties."

Asked to amplify, an Embassy spokesman said the reports originated from newspapers "trying to be malicious." He refused to single out any individual newspaper.

The text of the Embassy's statement follows:

"The Royal Egyptian Embassy notes that certain sections of the Press have recently referred to alleged differences between His Majesty, King Farouk, and the Wafd. The Embassy wishes to state that such insinuations are completely without foundation and can only be based on false assumptions and the misrepresentation of the loyal relations which exist between the King and all political parties."—Associated Press.

THAI POLICE EXPEL ARCHBISHOP

Rangoon, Jan. 10.—Seventy-seven year old Karl A. M. Tennison, the Latvian Buddhist Archbishop recently expelled from Thailand, today described Thailand as a "totalitarian dictatorship" where clergymen may be "arrested, gaoled and deported without trial."

Tennison, who claimed 18 years' Thai residence, told newsmen in Rangoon that Thai policemen raided his shrine in Bangkok, seized him and his 38-year-old son, F.W.A. Lasting, an Estonian, took them to the Burma border and ordered them to "get out of Thailand."

Tennison said that although he was a sick man at the time, he was sent on the laborious overland journey unprovided with medicines.

He accused the Thai Government of "disregarding human rights as provided for in the United Nations Charter."

He also accused the Government with seizing property legally owned by the United Buddhist Church of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania valued at millions of baht. Tennison, who has been a Buddhist priest for 37 years, and Lasting, were given sanctuary by a local Buddhist temple in Rangoon.—Associated Press.

JAPS LEND AMERICA DEAD FISH

Tokyo, Jan. 10.—Japanese, famous for their dead fish, have sent two of those dead longest to the United States under General Douglas MacArthur's auspices.

Both were caught and pickled by a Japanese naturalist in 1909, and they still are reputedly recognized as the only two of their kind in existence.

The rare fish are being loaned to the American Museum of Natural History by the Tokyo university through arrangements made with Occupation Headquarters by Dr. A. E. Perez, director of the American Museum. They will be used in biological research.

The fish is scientifically known as alepisoma watanabei Tanaka, the Tanaka being a special tribute to the Japanese scientist who first described them.

An occupation official, Mr. Don J. Pletch, commented: "The willing assistance of the Tokyo University faculty of science is in the finest scientific tradition."—United Press.

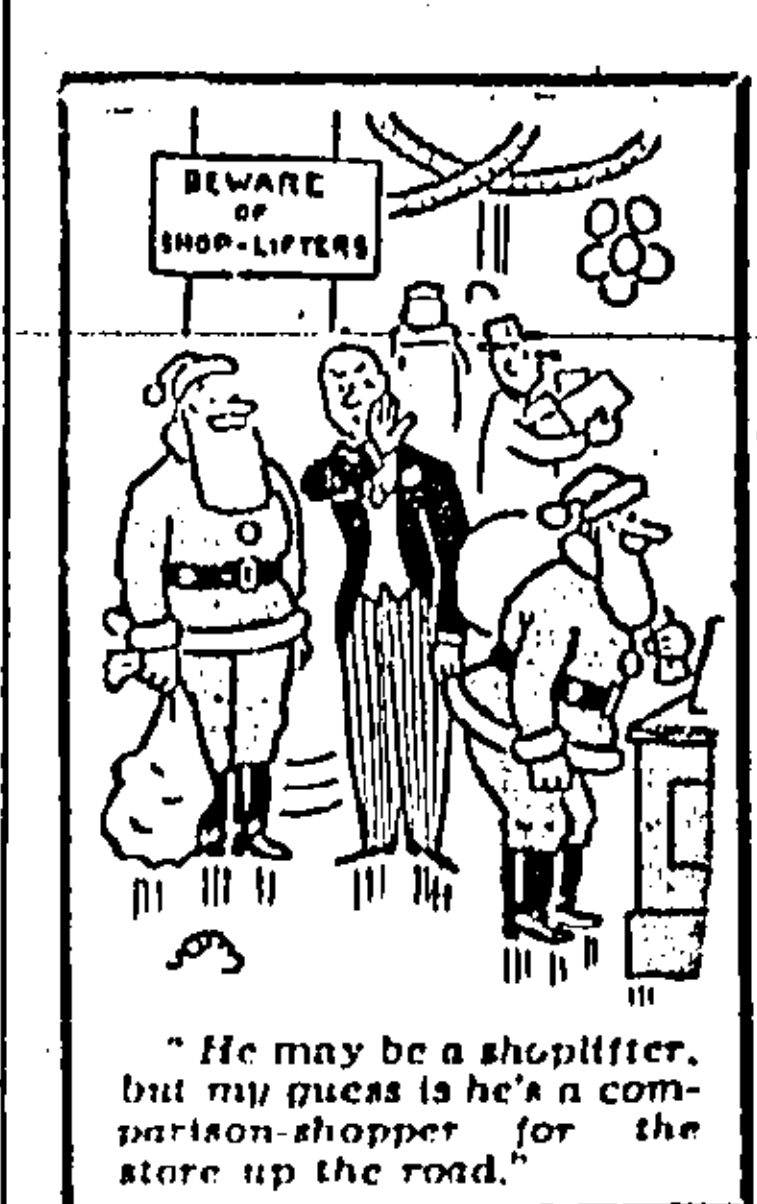

ANN SHERIDAN SUES STUDIO

Los Angeles, Jan. 10.—Ann Sheridan may get US$150,000 for a film in which she did not appear. Ann has filed a suit for US$350,000 damages against RKO, contending that she had a contract to receive US$150,000 for 10 weeks' work plus 10 per cent of a film's profits estimated at some US$200,000.

Ava Gardner received her part in the film.

Judge James Carter dismissed the claim to share the profits, but denied the defence's motion for him to disprove the claim for the salary. This question is to be decided later.—Associated Press.
